ABSTRACT

In recent decades, the issues on Task-Based Language Teaching (TBLT) have been widely investigated across the globe (e.g., Japan, Greece, and Indonesia). TBLT facilitates learners to improve their communicative competence in a natural setting. Although TBLT is not a new issue in ELT, there remains empirical evidence how it is represented in an ELT textbook in Indonesia, in particular. To fill this gap, informed by TBLT framework (Nunan, 2004), the present study addresses to examine how speaking tasks are prescribed in an Indonesian Senior High School ELT textbook. The result of this study shows that although the textbook portrayed a TBLT, there should be a revisit in the tasks, because it is important to make the designed task connected to the real world. Therefore, this study implies for English teachers as curriculum remakers in relation to design and re-appropriate English materials from an ELT textbook by considering the proper task to implement in their English classrooms.

Keywords: TBLT, Textbook Analysis, Speaking tasks.

INTRODUCTION

Task-based language teaching (TBLT) has become a significant issue in the field of Second Language Acquisition (SLA) in the early 1980s. It focused on developing process-oriented syllabi and designing communicative tasks to enhance learners' real language use via the emergence of the communicative language teaching approach and much stress on learners' communicative abilities during the past two decades (Jeon and Hahn, 2000). TBLT become a hot issue for researcher to dig more in order to gain information about learners' communicative learning.

Many previous researchers concerned to conduct studies in TBLT field (Loumpourdi, 2005; Ramakrishnan, 2017; Wan, 2017). In short, they attempted to examine TBLT during teaching learning process with aim to improve students’ English proficiency what make the present study differ that it analyzes an Indonesian Senior High School ELT textbook focusing on speaking tasks informed by TBLT framework (Nunan, 2004). The researchers decided to focus on textbook because tasks can affect teachers’ and students’ conception and perception in real life situations and it is used to train the student in using second language (L2) (Seedhouse, 1999). The teacher can design their materials form the textbook by considering the proper task, and the students will be completing specific tasks that facilitates learners to improve their communicative ability in ‘real world’ situations with TBLT. Thus, the representation of tasks especially speaking task in ELT textbooks is worthy of close investigation. The present study examines representation of the speaking tasks in an Indonesian ELT textbook used by students, prepared by the Government for the implementation of the Curriculum 2013. The contribution of this study is to examine speaking task in textbook in order to help English teacher to design a proper task. The findings of the study can be a consideration for language teachers and language materials developers to re-think of how tasks are represented in ELT textbooks.

METHOD

1. Design and Procedure

The researchers obtained the data from an in Indonesia EFL textbook used by the student prepared for the implementation of Curriculum 2013. Book titled ‘Bahasa Inggris’ use for first grade senior high school student in first semester. This textbook is organized and reviewed under coordination of the Ministry of Education and Culture, used for the implementation in early of curriculum 2013.

The book consists of 9 chapters including (warmer, vocabulary builder / exercise, pronunciation practice, reading, text structure, grammar review, speaking, writing and reflection) with different topic, to improve students’ skill in English, it used text-based learning approach both oral and written. This study focuses on the represented speaking tasks in the textbook, whether it represents TBLT or not.

2. Data Analysis

Dealing with TBLT aimed to the real-world tasks, framework for TBLT proposed by Nunan (2004) was used as an approach to this study in analyzing speaking tasks in every chapters of EFL textbook. This aims to transform real-world tasks into pedagogical tasks, which will be described in detail below: (1) Rehearsal rationale, (2) Activation rationale.

Rehearsal Rationale (RR) indicates that a task has a distinct and tangible connection to the real world. This offers students to exercise something they need when they go out of classroom. For instance, when a teacher asks students to do an exercise of hotel reservation, which is conducted in the classroom, but it also required out of classroom.

Activation Rationale (AR) is the opposite of RR. This describes that a task is not connected to the real world nor provided students to rehearse something they need out of classroom, except to emerge their language skill. In this framework, to develop skills and knowledge of the language, enabling skills are presented which consist of two kinds: (1) Language exercises are able to focus in many forms such as phonological, lexical, or grammatical system. (2) Communicative activities are adequate to language exercise in terms of how it provides restricted language items. These are also quite similar to the pedagogical tasks term because these have meaningful communication element.

After the researchers conducted the analysis, using framework for TBLT by Nunan (2004), the principles of TBLT proposed by Nunan (2004) was utilized to be the reinforcement of the analysis. Therefore, the result of the analysis would be stronger that the texts were TBLT.

Those are classified into seven principles. Those are scaffolding which describes that the tasks have language that has not been explicitly taught to the learners, task dependency, which is a task, related to the previous task, recycling offers the opportunities to activate learning in natural setting. Next, active learning describes the learners acquire the language the way they use it actively. Afterwards, integration on form and function indicates where the tasks have to provide a clear relationship between grammatical form, communicative function, and semantic meaning. Next is reproduction to creation the student can creatively use the language. The last, reflection offers learners to reflect on what they have learned and how they did it.

From the data above, we know that there are 15 speaking tasks in the textbook. We can see although it is written as ‘Speaking Task’ activity, only 12 tasks that represented the principle of TBLT. Nine of the tasks meet the criteria as Rehearsal Rationale (RR), and three tasks meet criteria as Activation Rationale (AR). RR is more than AR showed that the textbook is appropriate to use. Based on TBLT framework, the students would face an issue that may be applied in their real life. In chapter 1 (tasks 1 and 2) and chapter 5 (task 1) are include in AR because it is not based on the real world but it is stimulus the student to speak English. The rest of the tasks are including in RR because it is related to the real situations like make and respond to the compliment or sympathy, the situation that provided are relate to real world, speech and describing something.

Three of them unsatisfactory do not meet the criteria whether those are Rehearsal Rationale or Activation Rationale. These tasks are in chapter 2 (task 1 and 2) the topic is about ‘complementing and showing care’, means the students need to express their feeling to compliment or showing a care to their teachers or friends. Unfortunately, in speaking task, page 25 does not represent as a speaking task. The task 1 asks students to guest the numbers that represent as expression for compliments or sympathy, and in the task 2 only ask the students to complete the spaces with the expressions of compliment/ care and responses, in other word the task has no speaking task, except it is included as vocabulary builder. A same issue that speaking task does not have a speaking activity may see at page 37 in chapter 3, speaking task 1. The topic is about ‘Expressing Intention’ which is really good for the students. They will be trained to make a conversation based on the situation that given. It helps them to communicate with others in the specific real conditions that would be faced by them. However, if you check the speaking task 1 on this chapter, you will not find a speaking task. The task requires the students to make a short conversation in the specific condition such as asking your friend to do Biology project at library, asking friend to go to the movie in the weekend, asking friends’ plan to spend their holiday, discussing class performance for celebrating school’s anniversary, and visit friends who does not attend the class because s/he is sick. Unfortunately, that activity requires student to write their conversation not orally.

Some of the speaking tasks in the textbook are already used the principle of TBLT, like the principle of recycling in chapter 2 (task 3 and 4) the student can express and respond compliment or sympathy in different situations, the principle of reflection are used in each chapter. After the students have finished the chapter, they can reflect what they have done. The principle of active learning like in chapter 6 until 9 showed that the students have opportunities to use the language in form of describing or speech in front of the class or their partner. The principle of reproductive to creation in each chapter, the students can make their own project creatively, like in describing and speech.

CONCLUSION

The focus of the study is examining how speaking tasks in an Indonesian Senior High School ELT textbook entitled ‘Bahasa Inggris’ for first grade in the first semester are prescribe and meet the criteria regarding framework for TBLT by Nunan (2004). The findings showed that 12 speaking tasks in the textbook fulfilled the criteria as TBLT, while three speaking tasks in the textbook were unsatisfactory and had not fulfilled the criteria as TBLT. Based on the findings and the discussion, there are several recommendations for teacher and further study. For teachers, they require to be more aware and be more selective to the tasks in a textbook that might be utilized for their teaching necessity. Therefore, it is necessary for teacher to re-visit and re-appropriate the task before designing English materials from an ELT textbook.

Despite of this study contribution, further research needs to investigate are the analysis of other tasks in an Indonesian EFL textbook especially ‘Bahasa Inggris’ book because the researchers only focus on speaking tasks represented, and this study would like to recommend analyzing the textbook by using another framework to find out the strength of the tasks represented.
